The basic design of the armillary sphere has remained unchanged throughout the centuries. The instrument shown dates from the second half of the Sixteenth century. The positions of individual bright stars in particular are marked by arrows of metal. From the setting of the height of the poles, it is believed that it was used by Tycho Brahe.